DAILY BRIEF

*Berlin: The Soviet Union has now given its support to the East German regime's systematic efforts of the last several days to force US officials to acknowledge the right of East German guards at the Friedrichstrasse checkpoint in East Berlin to exercise control over US-licensed vehicles driven by civilians, or accept a self-imposed denial of entry to the Soviet sector. In response to a protest personally made by the American commander in Berlin on 25 October against these East German practices, the Soviet commandant, Solovyev, insisted on the right of the East Germans to exercise controls at the East-West Berlin sector border. Solovyev further maintained that the USSR can not influence or interfere with East German actions at the sector border.

US officials maintain that US forces license plates are sufficient identification, while the East Germans have insisted that the occupants must, when not in uniform, show identification documents. Soviet officials in Berlin had indicated their acceptance of the US position as recently as 22 October when the Soviet political advisor told the American political advisor that the East Germans had made a mistake in not permitting the passage of US-licensed vehicles and that this would be corrected. This statement was followed on the next day, however, with an East German Interior Ministry announcement that the regime's police were under instructions to permit foreign citizens to pass only after showing their passports. The announcement claimed that "persons in civilian clothes" were trying to evade these regulations without "proving" membership in the Western occupation forces.

Iran: The Shah, who has reluctantly supported Prime Minister Amini for six months, may be considering resuming personal control of the government as complaints increase from special interests affected by Amini's reform program. The Shah has probably been dissatisfied by his lack of complete control over Amini, who was appointed in May following public demonstrations directed against last February's rigged elections. A number of politicians, landowners, and government officials who have the Shah's ear are reportedly urging early elections, which would be so arranged as to result in the removal of the Amini government.]

No

The Shah's leadership has not been effective in the past, and his return to running the government would invite widespread criticism and encourage more plotting against him.]

[redacted] to expedite the negotiations under way since 20 October for the settlement of outstanding differences between Japan and South Korea. The Japanese Foreign Ministry has indicated that Prime Minister Ikeda is not prepared to discuss figures for a financial settlement of South Korean claims, which is the issue of paramount interest to the Koreans. Tokyo will, however, try to prevent Kim from appearing to have failed as did a previous Korean mission.

[redacted] Kim may also intend to explore the possibility of negotiating a mutual defense pact with Japan and Nationalist China. Kim was in Taiwan earlier this month. He is almost certain to be turned down on this proposal because of Japanese fears of becoming involved in any military arrangement. Public knowledge of such a proposal would provide the Japanese opposition with an issue for attacking the government and further jeopardize the prospects of normalizing relations between the two countries.
